“We are excited to welcome Tabitha to our team,” stated Emily Hinton, AIA, principal of Lindsey Architecture. “She demonstrated immense design talent and a commitment to client service during her internship over the past year, and it made perfect sense for her to slide into a full-time role as interior designer – a role we have been looking to fulfill with the right candidate for the past several months. It turns out, we had the perfect candidate on staff with Tabitha, and the timing was right with her recent graduation. Now, we can provide a seamless and consistent experience on the projects she has been engaged with.”

Currently, Lindsey Architecture has several other open positions, including project architect and director of interior design, to support its growing client base and recently awarded projects.
