Lindsey Architecture increases staff by 25 percent

Greensboro, NC (March 25, 2024) – Lindsey Architecture recently hired two new employees for its Greensboro, North Carolina, office. Elizabeth Goliber joined the firm as architectural designer, and Barbara Verstat serves as the office administrator. The latest new hires bring Lindsey Architecture's full-time employee count to ten.

Elizabeth has 25 years of professional experience with nearly 10 years of experience in the AEC industry. She supports the firm's architectural practice across all project types. Most recently, she worked as a BIM operator for a firm in Winston-Salem. She currently serves in a volunteer capacity for PT Crew as a member of the Events Committee, as well as co-director of Reunion Weekend for the Salem Academy Alumnae Board – her alma mater. She holds two MBA degrees – in Human Resource Management and Global Technology Management – from American Intercontinental University, as well as a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration.

Barbara ("Barb") has 25 years of professional experience with roles ranging from administrative assistant to senior staff assistant for organizations including design firms, financial institutions, and government agencies. Specializing in office management, she manages Lindsey Architecture's day-to-day office needs. A native of Wheaton, Illinois, Barb relocated to Stokesdale in 2017.

"We are excited to welcome Elizabeth and Barb to our team," stated Emily Hinton, AIA, principal of Lindsey Architecture. "Their decades of experience, talent, and wealth of knowledge in our industry is immensely valuable to our clients and culture."

Currently, Lindsey Architecture has several other open positions, including project architect, interior designer, and director of interior design to support its growing client base and recently awarded projects.
